A Spanish Actor's Rebirth: Van de Grac's Journey From Europe to China's Stage

By Kirby John Canary

Legendary actor Al Pacino once said, "Acting is a study of humanity. It's examining, and it's exploration." The sentiment is echoed by Spanish actor Van de Grac, who has made a name for himself by undertaking intense roles in various Chinese films and television shows.

We are an artistic theater in, we are invited into de Grac's home and offered green tea. His bookshelves are filled with philosophy books on Taoism, Buddhism, and Confucianism. "I am very passionate about the Eastern style of thinking," he tells us in an absolute must to understand Chinese culture to live here properly."

When working with directors and actors from different countries, there can be a big language and cultural barrier, but not so for Van. "Sometimes you work with people who want to get everything finished as soon as possible, and you can make something decent with those people, but sometimes you come across a director who understands the actor's role and the preparation that is required to build a character, and that's where the magic happens."

Van has been living here and working as an actor since 2017. His story is a long one. He studied the performing arts and sculpture in Barcelona. Then he became a florist and performer of Modern Art, a sort of experimental theater that used to tour Europe, living on the road and traveling from town to town. "I love rock rock, I love the adventure. When we need to shoot in various locations, I like to ask for it. How many hours on the road? I've been there, working. I love it, man. I really love it."

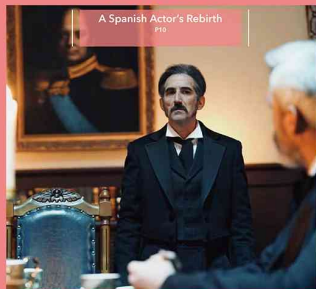

He tells us of a recent commercial he filmed in Qin Zhong, which had a similar sense of travel and where he was very impressed by the director's artistic vision. "Some people like it for the fame and the money, and they are not my people. My role as an actor is to grow and mature and eventually understand human nature in depth, at its core."

He took a long break from acting to help his father's business, allowing him to travel all over Asia. Deciding to go back into acting in 2016, he took a year to re-work his technique so he could perform better on camera as opposed to theater as he had before. This paid off big time, as he has worked on 15 films, more TV shows, and over 200 commercials. Notably, his role as General Chuang Tzu in the highly successful TV series Crossing the Void. But his games are not over yet. He has accumulated as the most achieved record worldwide on CCTV. De Grac, who also became recognized as the mysterious role of "Connor" in the film Doctor Redux, which he believes is his story in life.

We ask him if he ever gave tips to or asked for help from Chinese actors. "We made to give our advice without it being asked of you, but you definitely try and cooperate with other actors and work together to make something. Gaining a little degree, we get two actors' names that he recalls appreciating the privilege of working with. "In relation actor like Van de Grac (2018), who commanded a mission previous you have too much and being around him. If you play football and work alongside him, you will improve your game massively." Another actor he mentioned is Wang Kai (2018), who is young, handsome, and extremely professional on set."

We look through his acting book and see that it's extensive. We stop and ask about the scene where he is being held by a hammer. He explains, "They asked me if I wanted a stunt double for this scene because it could be a bit dangerous. Well I said no, no you show that the equipment is safe, and show it to do it." The 32-year-old actor is full of passion and excitement to show his cities and appreciate the opportunity he has been given in China. "I can't really be grateful for the rules. For him, he will use his Spanish. The industry has been very good to me; my whole life of performing on the road back in my youth and traveling around Asia has led me to the movies and TV shows. I have had the opportunity to perform."

On set, he has an opinion about him. The actor is very curious about the equipment we have brought to record the interview. He has (DND) his own set of tools to show which he tells us he enjoys researching for the acting technique as much as the show, the movies.

On the wall is a map of China with the names of all the provinces. "I regret not knowing my Chinese more. There are so many interesting things about Chinese culture that I enjoy reading about." Their philosophy that the mind, body, and spirit are connected and how the spirit is the most fascinating role. Perhaps this curiosity has led him to immerse himself in such interesting characters; he seems to think so. "The more you have to people can only help you grow to become a better actor, and that's how I approach it."
